Canadian Legion Scholarships to the either of the three Schools of Agriculture are available to many of you or your sons and daughters. The full particulars and application forms are here. Just write for them.

Keeping nylon white is not as difficult as bleaching it to whiteness after it has once turned color. Powdered bleach is the only kind of bleach you should use on nylon or wool—liquid bleach is much too strong. Because of the mildness of powdered bleach the garment won't be white after one washing in bleach. This bleach, used every washing (no, it won't fade your colored clothes) will keep nylons bright. White nylons should be washed separately from all colored clothes because it picks up dyes very easily. In a laundry book put out by a bleuing and starch company, bleuing nylon is recommended. I haven't tried it but you might like to.

A cool drink on a hot day is something to remember. This Spiced Grape Juice is too. (Need I remind you that fruit juices cost less and are better for you than soft drinks? Good, I knew you'd remember).

For two glasses let stand
Juice of 1 lemon.
¼ tsp. mint.
¼ tsp. cinnamon.
Orange rind.
½ cup of sugar.

Then strain it and add grape juice. Dilute a bit with water if you like.

I hope you are having a wonderful summer—picnics and fishing trips and fun.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY

THE FLOWER HUNTER

By Louis Arthur Cunningham
When the Proposal Came to Elizabeth Rand, Did Not Laugh As She Thought She Would Do.

ELIZABETH RAND looked with wonder at the pale young man among the flowers.

"You tell me, Mr. Grantley, that you would be content to spend all your life in a little cabin up here on the hills? You never long to get out into the real life of the world—the life that means conflict, struggle and sorrow? Don't you ever feel that the world is your heritage—a hard one to claim, I'll grant you, but one worth while? You judge its responsibilities by living . . . among flowers?"

John Grantley smiled tolerantly at Elizabeth's young enthusiasm. Grantley was a blond, thin young fellow. He wore glasses and there were many wrinkles about his eyes; yet, for all that, he looked much older than he really was.

"So you think it is not a man's place . . . among the flowers, Miss Rand? I am sort of a slacker . . . is that it? Every man must live his own life. I do not say that mine will always be like this . . . up here in the quiet hills, away from the cities and their crowds. No, it is not always summer. There are not always flowers."

They were sitting on the grass in front of the mountain cabin where Elizabeth, staying at the time, of the Simonds family, her relatives, two miles down the mountains, often came to talk to the strange man whom people called The Flower-Hunter.

"When September comes . . . and it is only a month away . . . continued Grantley, "I shall leave here unhappy, unless . . . unless . . . Elizabeth, dearest, I love you. I want you. Won't you marry me?" Elizabeth drew her hand from his. She had often wondered what she would do if this man proposed to her. She would laugh, she used to tell herself. It would be too ridiculous. She, a senior at Vanstone, just a year away from her degree, proposing to a rather skinny, bespectacled, unbrowned young man who lived in a crazy cabin banked around by flowers of countless varieties and colors.

But when the proposal came she did not laugh. The woman was not made that could laugh at the sincerity and honesty with that Grantley showed. His mild blue eyes searched her proud face eagerly, trying to read his happiness in the depths of her eyes. Those baffling, brown eyes that had been too much for many a love-smitten collegian.

"Marry you?" Elizabeth felt deep in her heart that she cared for him. But it was all so impossible. Her parents would never hear of the match. It was taken for granted by Elizabeth's family and friends that she would marry Pierce Grantley, a Senior at Nadham. Pierce was coming up to visit the Simonds and her that very afternoon, probably was there by now, while she was sitting on the cool grass in the shadow of a flowering rose bush listening to a proposal of marriage.

"I could never marry you, John . . . I am sorry . . . sorry this has happened to me. My dear friends, and I love to come and visit you and sit with you here among your flowers. But now . . ."

As gentle as a kitten as she could, Elizabeth told him the many things that stood in the way of their marriage.

He listened patiently, a whimsical smile crinkling his lips. "Could not love overcome all your objections, Elizabeth? Tell me . . . you care for me at all? If you leave the flowers . . . I shall be free of conflict . . . He shuddered, would you . . . could I hope to win you? You have another year at Vanstone, you tell me. At the end of that time . . ."

"But Pierce Grantley . . . We have been intended for each other since childhood. Pierce is a fine chap . . . Why, here he comes now!"

A grey rooster came crawling up the mountain road from the great white pile of the Simonds house far below them.

"He is coming for you," said Grantley, looking away from her, toying with the rose in his hand. "I'm sorry if I have spoiled our friendship, Elizabeth. I was sort of a fool to hope that you . . . that you would love a silly Flower-Hunter."

He said the words got bitterly. There was a hint of sorrow about his mouth. Elizabeth's heart ached for him. Certainly she wasn't in love with Pierce. The grey car came near.

"I must say good-by to you now, Elizabeth. We may meet again. Yes, I feel sure that we shall meet again, and let it be as friends."

Elizabeth could have wept. Oh, for time . . . just a little time to think calmly. She did not want to lose him. It had been so lovely. Pierce came up the path to the door. With a thrill that was not jealousy Elizabeth saw that a girl waited in the car. Pierce was rather fond of Mae Glenning.

"Hello, Beth!" called Pierce; then, looking at Grantley he stopped in confusion.

"Why, hello, professor," he said like a shy Freshman. "I didn't know it was up here you were working on your book. And is it true you are leaving our school for good to teach at Vanstone? I've never had so fine a class as my Freshman Botany."

Pierce marked Elizabeth's puzzled embarrassment. "I guess Mr. Grantley has been going up here. He is the greatest botanist in the country. He's going to teach at your school next year. Well, perhaps you would just as soon say here and talk. I suppose Mr. Grantley will have some Senior classes and you might like . . ."

"Yes," said Elizabeth. "I think I may sign up with him."

NEW TOURIST SPOT

OSLO, Norway.—Tourists will be able to visit the Arctic Island of Spitzbergen this summer. The Norwegian vessel Lyngen will make six voyages from Tromsø to Spitzbergen from July 1 to August 30. Spitzbergen was the scene of a wartime raid in which Canadian troops took part in 1941.

PHOTO-PROOF OF BUSHLAND BATTLE—Many bushmen who have spent all their lives in the Canadian forests have never seen evidence that moose sometimes lock their horns in battle and, unable to untangle themselves, die. Dan Row, (left), a salesman who travels Ontario's north country, brought back this photograph as proof it can and does happen. At Hearst, Ont., two government employees examine the evidence and pronounce it genuine. They couldn't separate the hogs, which together weighed 200 pounds.—Central Press Canadian.

You'll Like This Family--We Did

—And the Family Reading Club chose it as "safe and enjoyable for all members of the family to read." It's called "The Penningtons" and is written by a man who knows his characters thoroughly and makes them life like. In fact we'd bet he knew them all in real life.

The whole 284 pages interested and amused so much that we couldn't stop till we'd read them all. Many friends tell us they felt they knew the people in the story and were greatly pleased we'd recommended it to them.

Big city reviewers who get all kinds of books felt in love with the Pennington family story and gave long columns of praise as W. A. Deacon of Toronto Globe and Mail said, in part—

"A bold venture on the part of the author is certainly going to repay him well because a large number of people are going to like The Penningtons immensely. It starts slowly in a city, which might be Frederick, with the hard, kindly and very poor dean of the cathedral, his wife, whose temper had suffered from the trials of parish service, and half a dozen children, varying from a boy of 11 to a son and daughter each in their early 30's.

Two of the children are already married when the story opens, three more marry during its course. The action consists of the problems of the home, the reactions of the brothers and sisters to each other and to their parents. Ties of natural affection are very strong, as they are apt to be in large families. It is impossible to say when the doings and sayings of the Penningtons waken interest. Perhaps it is through the similarities and contrasts of family traits in the members of the group. But there is no doubt at all that interest in the fortunes of the group and its members mounts imperceptibly and steadily throughout the narrative.

On the dean's death, some of the children go to the eldest brother, Adrian, in Rochester, while Philip joins his brother-in-law, Robert, in Montreal. At first this reader credited the change of scene with the increasing interest, because both cities are graphically handled. But in the final pages it became quite evident that absorption in the story was the product of Mr. Partridge's success with his people. Utterly natural in all they do, they are completely credible as human beings. The reader comes to believe in them as real.

If your bookseller has not got the book (it sells at $3.75) you could ask him to get it from the publishers who are The Ryerson Press, Toronto. We liked it—our friends like it—and you will too.

Basil Partridge has done a grand job in "The Penningtons" and its good to see a Canadian author with a real success in his first book but of course he has been a successful writer for years and a great student.

Printer With A Few Drinks

Out in Missouri a farmer gave a printing office an order for sale bills. The job was promised for June 30th.

The date being the last day before the prolonged drought started. The printer decided to take a few drinks. He took several. Then he happened to remember the bills that were promised for delivery that day and staggered to the office to get out the job.

The farmer called for the bills, paid for them, and took them home. Next day he started to put them up, and this is what he read when he came to the list of articles for sale:

Twenty-five cows broke to work; 41 head of cultivators coming in noon; 100 bushels of shovelling boards with scoops at side; 8 piano range; 120 rods canvas belting, better than new; De Laval cow with ice cream attachment; McCormick binder in foil; Poland china bobbed due to farrow in April; 14 head of chickens with grass seed attachments, in good working order; 2 J. I. Case riding heifers, good as new, spraying outfit, can be ridden by children; 15 Billy goats; 10 bushes of spraying nozzles and other attachments; Man; other articles too numerous to mention, which I expect to get at night between now and date of sale.

New Pet Replacing Wire-Terrier In K.

LONDON.—Figures issued by Britain's kennel club show that the Welsh Corgi, a favorite of the royal family, is becoming the most popular family pet.

The Corgi has moved up to fourth place in the annual popularity poll of pedigree pups, displacing the wire-haired terrier which has been one of the first four more than 30 years. The Corgi's popularity dates from 1933 when the late King George VI bought a pup for his daughter, Princess Elizabeth. Now Elizabeth as Queen has a Corgi called Sugar as nursery pet for her two children, Prince Charles and Princess Anne. The pup is daughter, the reigning pet of the royal household, Susan.

Hanging Restores Fabric In Wool

If a man has two suits of clothes and wears each three days a week, they should last twice as long as one suit worn every day.

Wrong—they will last at least three times as long.

Because, in hanging, the elastic nature of the woven woollen fabric restores itself to shape. But, when being caught in the rain, a suit should therefore only require pressing once a month, cleaning probably every second month. A properly formed washline hanger contributes much to the snugness of fit at the collar.

Gas is Cheap in Irma

40,000 cubic feet — the average householder's consumption for a cold winter month — costs Irma customers $16.56.

This same 40,000 cubic feet costs in Canada's seven largest cities anything from $28.00 to $55.39— an average of $39.20.

Winnipeg	$28.00	Quebec	$55.39
Montreal	$42.12	Toronto	$36.02
Vancouver	$42.04	Hamilton	$30.30
		Ottawa	$40.50

And another thing—gas in these cities has less than half the heating value of Irma gas! The facts speak for themselves — gas IS cheap in Irma.
